Nutrien is weighing the future of its phosphate business after sulfur supply constraints pushed second - quarter margins negative. Phosphate production costs rose 26% to $812 per tonne as constrained sulfur supplies squeezed margins, prompting a strategic review of the segment that could include curtailments or asset restructuring. The pressure is industry - wide: Mosaic posted a $273 million net loss in the second quarter as the sulfur crisis forced production curtailments at four U.S. plants. Analysts say the sulfur shortage has become a structural constraint on North American phosphate output rather than a short - term disruption.
