Urea reached $409 per metric ton on August 21, 2026, a 2.25% daily gain, though the benchmark remains down 8.3% for the month and 6.5% below year - ago levels. Progress in diplomatic talks aimed at restoring Strait of Hormuz shipping has reduced geopolitical risk premiums that have pressured fertilizer markets since February. Beijing relaxed urea export restrictions, increasing global supply availability, with Chinese suppliers expected to participate actively in India's August procurement tenders. Northern Hemisphere planting completion and Brazil's reduced purchases are tempering demand, contributing to price declines from April's peak above $850 per ton. Despite the correction, urea futures remain approximately 9% higher since the start of 2026, reflecting structural supply constraints from the Hormuz disruption and ongoing Middle East production outages.
