Alexandre Quesada, CEO of SmartTox, discussed the barriers facing new crop protection products entering Brazil, pointing to excessive bureaucracy and lack of predictability in getting new products approved. Delays affect more than new molecules, as mixtures and reformulations are stuck in the same long queue. He emphasized that companies can no longer rely on a one-size-fits-all regional strategy in Latin America and must tailor market access and regulatory plans to each country, including Brazil, Argentina, Chile, Ecuador and Mexico.
