CropLife Europe responded to the European Parliament's draft report on the Food and Feed Safety Omnibus, calling it a positive step toward streamlining regulatory procedures while preserving Europe's health and safety standards. The proposal seeks to accelerate farmers' access to crop protection innovations by strengthening mutual recognition across regulatory zones and aligning active substance approvals with product authorizations under Regulation 1107/2009. CropLife noted that developing a new crop protection product requires an average of € 276 million and years of investment, and warned that predictability of regulatory data protection must be maintained to sustain industry investment. The group stressed that farmers need a full toolbox, treating biological and conventional crop protection solutions as complementary rather than competing.
