The EPA finalized approval of two PFAS pesticides—diflufenican and epyrifenacil—for use on corn and soybeans, while expanding allowances for bifenthrin and approving chlormequat's first food use. This marks the third and fourth PFAS pesticide approvals under Trump within two years, compared to just one during the entire Biden administration's four years. The Center for Biological Diversity argues these pesticides meet the widely accepted scientific PFAS definition endorsed by over 150 researchers, despite EPA claims otherwise. The approvals came days after the Supreme Court ruled against thousands of cancer victims suing Monsanto over its glyphosate - based Roundup herbicide. Nathan Donley of the Center for Biological Diversity criticized what he called Trump's reckless push to ignore science and embrace long - lasting pesticides.
