Brazil's Senate approved PL 699/2023 (Profert — Fertilizer Industry Development Program) in August 2026, awaiting presidential signature. The legislation combines three support mechanisms: direct tax credits for domestic fertilizer producers, a dedicated BNDES development bank credit line for sector infrastructure investment, and a domestic - content floor beginning at 2% in 2027, rising to 10% by 2037 and potentially reaching 30% depending on supply availability. Brazil Potash, developing the Autazes potash project in Amazonas state, reported that Profert tax exemptions combined with existing SUFRAMA incentives could reduce construction costs by up to approximately $190 million on about $2.5 billion of initial capital expenditure. Brazil currently imports roughly 85% of its fertilizer consumption ($15 billion in 2025) and approximately 96% of its potash, critical nutrients for soybean and corn production.
