A coalition of more than 40 organizations including Safe Food Matters, the David Suzuki Foundation, Ecojustice, the National Farmers Union and Environmental Defence publicly condemned amendments to Canada's Pest Control Products Act buried in omnibus Bills C - 30 and C - 31. The changes would grant cabinet authority to overrule the Health Minister and permit pesticides with unacceptable environmental risks, and would require the Pesticides Regulatory Directorate to weigh 'economic security' and 'food security' in pesticide decisions without defined processes. The groups call it the largest overhaul of Canada's pesticide regulatory system in a generation, arguing it lacks scientific basis and public consultation and bypasses parliamentary debate.
