The Federation of Agriculture and Livestock of Mato Grosso (Famato) argued on September 8, 2026 that the Soy Moratorium — a private agreement among major companies establishing environmental procurement standards exceeding Brazilian law, particularly regarding deforestation — unfairly restricts market access for farmers who comply with existing environmental legislation. Legal Manager Rodrigo Gomes Bressane stated that those who produce legally should not be treated as non-conforming simply because they do not meet a private rule that is more restrictive than the Forest Code. Brazil's Supreme Court ruling terminated lawsuits challenging the moratorium's legality, including competition-law cases, halting CADE's technical investigation into potential violations of economic order and free competition. Private standards have become de facto market-entry requirements, and Famato warns the precedent could extend similar private environmental restrictions to other agricultural supply chains.
